

Loftus Peak Global Disruption Fund

Global Change. Listed Investments. Daily Liquidity.

Monthly Investor Letter
November 2016

Loftus Peak Global Disruption Fund invests in listed disruptive businesses globally. The fund provides geographical and sectoral diversification which lowers the concentration risk inherent in the typical Australian portfolio, with its heavy skew toward banks, resources and the Australian dollar.

Review & Outlook

The portfolio manager estimated return gross* of fees was 3.88%, which was 0.48% above the benchmark (MSCI AC World Net Total Return Index in Australian dollars). The benchmark returned 3.40% for the month.

The US election result caught many, including us, by surprise, with the failure by the polls to capture voters who choose not to participate in polls. Still, the markets have taken the view that Trump will be good for business by lowering tax rates and removing regulation. We will not argue.

However, the idea that Trump will be negative for investment in disruption is probably unfounded. That which is already in train such as the Tesla battery factory or the Amazon investment in logistics and distribution cannot be stopped. Competition, in the form of lower prices or a better product is disruption's best friend, and it is likely that businesses which execute to this will continue to gain ground.

The volatility of the markets was mitigated by the performance of the AUD dollar, which depreciated by 2.05% and so helped the portfolio. The US dollar is stronger because of the expectation that interest rates will rise as the new government tries to spend its way out of the economic doldrums.

Portfolio Contributors and Detractors.

We picked up the strong performance of Nvidia, which contributed 0.54% to the portfolio return following very good quarterly numbers. Apple was similarly strong. On the negative side, Tencent and Autodesk were slightly off as investors focused on Donald Trump's anti-China trade stance. Autodesk weakened after a strong run which saw the stock materially higher.
