Loftus Peak Global Disruption Fund (Hedged)

Research Rating:

December 2022 Update

Founded in 2014, Loftus Peak is a global fund manager with a focus on investment in listed disruptive businesses. Our extensive experience means we bring significant discipline to the process. The Loftus Peak Global Disruption Fund (Hedged) ("Fund") comprises some of the best and fastest-growing companies in the world – companies that we believe are driving change across all industries globally, constructed on the basis of strict criteria and included at carefully determined valuations. Holdings include large capitalisation names like Apple and Google (Alphabet) as well as many others that we expect to be household names in the future, such as AMD and Qualcomm. This approach to investment across a wide range of global industries lowers the concentration risk inherent in the typical Australian portfolio, with its heavy skew toward banks and resources. It is our intention to substantially hedge the capital component of the foreign currency exposure of the Fund arising from investments in overseas markets back to Australian dollars.

Review and Performance

The Fund was down -10.2% net-of-fees in December, which was underperformance of -5.5% against the Benchmark. A difficult first half year for the Fund, with the Fund down -8.2% since inception on 1 July. This corresponds to an underperformance of -9.0% against the Benchmark.

The market moves for the month reflect investor uncertainty in the face of interest rate hikes notwithstanding the November US CPI print, which showed inflation cooling. The US Federal Reserve, which drives global interest rates, remained cautious, so rates were hiked at its December meeting to the highest levels seen since 2007, while rate reductions are to be no earlier than 2024. The disconnect between leading inflation indicators and Fed behaviour drove volatility and a sell-off in December, with a solid January rally further proof of investor confusion.

Beyond the US, China reversed its zero-COVID policy. This may end the looming threat of businesses being abruptly disturbed by snap lockdowns. This is a tailwind for the broader economy and for companies operating out of and selling into China.

Contributors and Detractors to Return⁴

Semiconductors were the main detractors from performance for the Fund in December on overall market pessimism for demand in 2023. Qualcomm and Advanced Micro Devices were two of the three largest underperformers, on account of their large weighting in the portfolio, together cutting Fund value by -3.4%. The broad market moves contributed to the decline in semiconductor stocks, which traditionally trade as cyclical demand of PC's and smartphones. However, there remains a large and long-term opportunity in segments such as the datacentre, automotives and industrial, which should benefit the Fund's holdings.

Roku was the other top three detractor, reducing the value of the portfolio by -1.4% after it suffered an outsized fall in stock price due to the market perception of the tougher advertising outlook for 2023.

The Fund's best performing holdings were the Chinese companies Tencent and Alibaba, but this amounted only to a +0.2% contribution to Fund return for December, since we hold these stocks at very low weights. The stocks were boosted by the end of China's dynamic zero-COVID policy as well as the government's apparent rapprochement towards large Chinese technology companies.

While knowledge work has benefited significantly from digitisation and the cloud, there is also an outsized opportunity in the physical world - vehicles, machinery and worksites all benefit from a higher level of connectivity. Samsara, a new Fund position, facilitates this by providing its customers a single platform to manage connected assets, enabling greater efficiency.
